PART I: (35 points)

A Summer's Reading

1. iii) he can't find a suitable job
2. iii) he asks different kinds of questions
3. I think this smile shows us that Mr. Cattanzara doesn't believe that George will actually read the books. We can also see this when Mr. Cattanzara confronts George and tries to tell him that he is acting like a child with his lies. This is why he calls him "Georgie" and tells him to go buy himself a lemon ice, just like when he was a child.
4. Thinking Skill: Inferring
Answer: After lying about reading the books, good things started to happen to George. Perhaps this is the reason he didn't feel the need to actually read the books. However, after the difficult conversation with Mr. Cattanzara, George became very depressed. He was sure that nobody would ever respect him again because they would all know that he is a liar, yet when he goes out he realizes that people believe he has finished reading and that they still respect him. Now George is finally willing to try and do something with his life in order to deserve their respect. This explains why he is finally motivated to go to the library and try to read the books, as he said he would, instead of living in constant fear of being discovered.

PART II: (45 points)

All My Sons

5. ii) They blame him for the crime.
6. iii) Joe was afraid to lose the army contract
7. Chris: Chris means that Joe ignores the fact that they have been lying to Kate. Both Chris and his father believe that Larry is dead but they won't tell Mother because she will get upset.
Joe: Joe probably means that he ignores the fact that he killed 21 pilots and only focuses on the fact that he did it to save the plant and support his family. By ignoring the death of the 21 pilots, he is able to live without feeling guilty for his actions.
8. Ann is an important character because she shows Larry's letter to the Kellers. The letter makes Joe understand the severity of his actions and finally take responsibility and accept the consequences of what he has done – this is a major turning point in the play. After years of denying involvement and ignoring the guilt, Ann's actions make Joe realize that his son, Ann's fiancé, has committed suicide because of him. This causes Joe to decide that he can no longer live with himself and to commit suicide as well.
9. Thinking Skill: Comparing and Contrasting / Distinguishing Different Perspectives
Jim has ideals and cares about the greater good. He wanted to dedicate his life to medical research, not caring about money at all. He was willing to give up on his dreams and compromise for his wife in order to be a good husband, but even though he works hard in order to make a lot of money, he still believes in helping people without being rewarded for it.
Sue is the opposite. As a materialist, she only cares about money and the financial wellbeing of her family. She doesn't seem to take into consideration her husband's happiness and she forces him to compromise for her and work very long hours doing things he hates. She also tries to prevent him from being friends with Chris because she knows that Chris has ideals, like Jim once used to have.

Bridging Text and Context

15. The Split Cherry Tree:

In the quote above, Russel discusses the importance of teaching methods as well as the spirit in which the teaching is done.

In the story, Professor Herbert used many innovative teaching methods in order to teach his students. When Dave's father complained about the "bug larnin'" and the field trips, Herbert explained to him that going out to nature is the best way to study biology. He followed the curriculum, just like the quote says, but he found a fun and modern method of teaching his students, so they will enjoy the spirit of learning as much as the material.

16. The Enemy:

In the story "The Enemy", we learn how people from very different cultures can come together and create a beautiful relationship, in spite of the prejudice and hatred. At first, Sadao and Hana felt disgusted by Tom, but they decided to help him because they saw him as a person in need, not just as their enemy. In the end, Sadao even risked everything in order to help Tom escape, because, once again, he understood the value of humanity.

This relates to the quote by President Clinton, which says that humanity matters more than anything else does.
